minor details—insignificant in themselves—but without which no justice can be done to any important musical work.

When Madame SONTAG announced her first series of Operas, nearly all the former partons of the Opera wished to secure their seats for all the nights. This was respectfully declined; the past having abundantly shown that the subscription system is one of injustice to the subscribers as it compels them to attend all operas, however of an they might be given during the same season, without a reduction in the subscription price, as ensominy in Europe. To the public, because the occasional visitor is entirely procluded from getting a seat according to his choice.

During the last fortnight, however, the management has received numerous letters from business men, alluding to the impossibility of waiting one or two hours, until the crowd, which usually through the office at the opening, diminishes; from ladies, who, unable to attend daily at an early hour, have to intrust their sorvants with the choice of their seats. These remonstrances have been so pressing, that the management, ever desirous of accommodating the public, deemed it its duty to pay immediate attention to them, and still fully adhering to all the rules laid down during the first senses, proposes the following modification, which, it trusts, will meet with a general approval:

The diagram of Niblo's Garden, expressly made for Madane Sontar's Opera mights, contains 1,700 secured seats, bendes sufficient standing room for 1,000 persons, divided into sixteen sections—cight larger and eight smaller ones. Life in its varied relations at the North and at the South, is the thome of this work. In its graphic delimentions of character, trainfulness of representation, and stirring realities of life, it will hardly give place to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The authories is well known to the gublic by her many charming works of fiction, and her life has been passed at the North and South. The noblemess of her sentiments, her elevated and candid views, and her genuine feelings of homeanity, and the elegance and eloquence of her pen, are brought out in these pages with their full brilliancy and effect.

TO DRESSMAKERS or COSTUMERS.—
WANTED—A Lady who can measure accurately, and who is an experienced, accomplished, and economical cutter and fitter of ladies', children's, and infanci clothing of every description. None but those that have natural, as well as acquired capacity and taxte for the work described, need apply. Simple experience won't do. A lady who can comprehend an idea on dress, although it may not be fishionable, and who can measure a grown person of her own sex, or a child, for any desired garment, and can cut and fit it, and show how it should be put together, from the most simple morning dress, to the most fanciful, foreign, theatrical, or out-of-the-way coatume, if she one see it, or a drawing of it, or if the described to her—a lady, in short, who is rather a coatumer and general artist than a mere mechanical, every-day, follow-the fashion dressmaker, will hear of a first-class and permanent situation, with a good slary, uptown, by calling at No. 1:3 Nassan st., Office No. 15, on 3d story, between 2 and 5 o'clock, on any day this week.

The advertiser thinks it cheaper to pay for a long advertisement than to have her time intruded upon by incompetent persons. Therefore, to prevent such from applying, it may be well to state that specimens of work and reference will be required—and ret as a more matter of form; for, before an engagement is made, the references will all be called on, if in the city, and if elsewhere, written to, and questioned closely on the special qualifications and general character of the persons recommended; and the specimens of work acknihited will be minutely and critically inspected.
